Miss Kinder Hostess At Informal Reception

Monday evening, January 30, Miss Mae Kinder of the Portner gave an informal reception to a number of friends, the guests including Miss O. Plush, Mrs. Ferguson, Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Stadelman, Mrs. Adler, Miss Goldie Davis of Philadelphia, Miss Dorothy Luder, Misses Carlyle and Charlotte Mortimer, Mrs. C. Herman, Mr. and Mrs. de Lucca, Mrs. Wenkenback and son, Mrs. A. Seymour, Mrs. Mae Oliver, Mrs. C. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. A. Mehling, Mr. Mortimer King, Mr. Philip Lyons, Mr. David Miller and Mr. L. Ingraham.

Pink silk nightgowns cut on severely simple lines, and really stitched with tailor-like precision, depending on cut and stitching for their charm—not on any frilliness or trimming, for there is none.

Mrs. Gertrude R. Miller To Sing for Sisterhood

Mrs. Gertrude Reuter Miller, soprano, will sing at the meeting tomorrow afternoon of the Sisterhood of the Eighth Street Temple, which will be held in the temple at 2:30 o'clock. Miss Miriam Jeanette Goldberg of Philadelphia will be the guest of honor and will give a brief talk.

There are fascinating bowls for fruit made of tinted glass set in a holder of wrought and painted iron. These come in all sizes, some big enough to hold fruit for breakfast for two, some big enough to serve as centerpiece at a big Thanksgiving dinner table. The color of the glass, too, is variable, so that such a dish might be chosen to go with any color in china.

MRS. MARTIN A. MORRISON. Wife of the new president of the Civil Service Commission and chairman of the banquet committee of the College Women's Club, which will entertain at Rauscher's February 25.

Irish Economy.

The most important lesson Irish housewives have ever taught the rest of us is the value of potatoes in the daily diet. Potatoes need no special plea, however. Everything else in our daily diet has its ups and downs. First we are told that white bread has little nutritive value, then we are warned against eating too much diet and the soaring price of beef and mutton rubs the warning in; then bacteriologists caution us against the dangers lurking in milk; eggs suddenly grow scarce and we have an eggless diet; a prominent woman's college devotes butter to a useless article of food and we contemplate a butterless existence; fresh fruits are said to harbor bacteria germs and fish may be filled with ptomaines, we hear. But potatoes continue unchanged and we go on and probably shall go on eating potatoes once or twice or even three times a day.

Who ever heard of a potato being too dear to buy or who ever heard potatoes accused of harboring harmful germs? As a matter of fact, only recently a scientific dietitian has come forward with an especially enthusiastic account of their high food value.

Of course, potatoes did not originate in Ireland, but for some reason the Irish became their staunchest advocates and it is in the homes of the Emerald Isle that we must look for the most toothsome way of cooking and serving them.

Some Irish Recipes. Mash four or five good-sized potatoes and mix in a lump of butter. Butter a baking pan and fill it with three or five alternate layers each of mashed potatoes and bread crumbs. Beat up an egg with a little milk, salt and pepper and add. Bake for about twenty minutes.

Potatoes puffs begin with mashed potatoes seasoned with butter, and mixed with half a cup of milk and one or two beaten eggs. The mixture should be beaten very light.

Have a pan of deep fat at a good frying temperature and drop the mixture into the fat and brown a light brown.

Another dish that the Hibernian housewife can teach us to make is the far-famed Irish stew, of which potatoes are a part. It can be made either of beef or of mutton.

A favorite stew is made of mutton chops—shoulder chops are much less expensive than loin or rib chops, and answer the purpose. They should be put in a saucepan with a few tablespoons of hot dripping, some cubed raw potatoes, sliced raw turnip and sliced raw onion, flavored with salt and pepper. When the chops are seared add two cups of boiling water, cover the saucepan and allow it to cook slowly, say for three-quarters of an hour. Have a heaping tablespoon of flour, mixed smooth in half a cup of milk. Remove the chops, keep them hot, and thicken the gravy with the flour and milk, allowing it to boil for five minutes. Pour over the chops and serve as a stew.
